DAHLIA GARDENS enter this year upon their tenth season. We might dwell at length upon the experiences of these years, especially with reference to the problems of climate, but the results speak for themselves in the varieties of Dahlias we offer. It has been our constant aim to obtain and offer only those Dahlias, which, in spite of the hot, dry summers of the mid-west, have the requisites of satisfactory varieties. These we consider freedom of bloom, pleasing color, good stems and good keeping qualities.

During the past several seasons, we tried out many leading Dahlias of Holland, England, the Pacific Coast and Eastern States. While many were unsuccessful here, we discovered some splendid varieties among them. These we offer for the first time this season in collections, as our stock is insufficient to justify a catalogue. A large number of these Dahlias were in the Autumn and Art shades and a few in the stronger colors. Many flowers were gigantic in size, approaching eight and nine inches in diameter, without disbudding.

We are offering two collections this season, one including a selection of these newer varieties, for those who wish "something different," an assortment of harmonizing colors and varied forms with a predominance of autumn shades; the other including only improved and modern standard varieties of a beautiful range of color and form. These collections will arouse the keenest admiration of all who see them, for their wonderful beauty and effectiveness.

Collection I, Fine Newer Varieties, 6 roots . $5.00

Collection II, Splendid Standard Sorts, 12 roots $5.00

(All Divisions of FIELD GROWN ROOTS)

To those preferring to choose special varieties or color schemes from description, we suggest corresponding with us, giving an idea of your requirements, and we will be glad to recommend a list to select from.

Our patrons will note a change in name and address, although the Gardens are under the same management as before, Mrs. Huff having been Hallie H. Conkling, of Muscatine, previous to her marriage. The Display Garden will be continued in Muscatine, at the former location, 1310 James Place, between Park Ave. and Weed Park.
